Dear Chris:

I read with great interest the item in the New York Times yesterday indicating the survey of manpower needs in foreign affairs that you will be undertaking on behalf of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. I am delighted that this is being done and that you are heading it and was very pleased to note the outstanding caliber of your associates.

Needless to say, if there is anything at all we can do to be of assistance we hope that you will call on us.

Sincerely,

SIGNED

PANEL TO SURVEY FOREIGN SERVICE

Herter Heads Group to Sift
U. S. Personnel Needs

Aug 31, 1961

By FARNSWORTH FOWLE

An independent committee headed by former Secretary of State Christian A. Herter will estimate the Government's manpower needs in foreign affairs for the next decade. It will also suggest ways of recruiting and training the right persons for the job.

The Carnegie Endowment for International Peace said yesterday that the survey under its auspices would publish its report before the end of 1962.

The study has Government endorsement and the promise of official cooperation but will be completely independent of Government influence or control, the announcement said. It will focus on the personnel needs of the State Department and of the various agencies within it, and also of the United States Information Agency.

The committee will have the aid of a staff directed by Dr. Frederick G. Mosher, a professor of political science at the University of California in Berkeley.

The twelve members of the committee include persons with both career and noncareer experience in foreign affairs. They will form separate task forces to evaluate and make recommendations on:

¶ Recruitment at the entrance level and at advanced levels.
¶ Programs for career development.
